Dear Sir or Madam,

I am the Director for Maritime Operations with SiriusInsight.AI, a data analytics company based in London, UK. It is a small company where Armand worked as an intern for a few months. With only about 15 employees working in the same space, I was able to get to know Armand well. Of all the employees he was the youngest, and one of the best.

My background is in the British navy and so I am used to working with young people. While I am not in any way experienced in Armand's field of computer science, I am able to value his skills be they professional or personal. He works hard, readily accepts instructions and gets on with his work diligently.

Above that, he has a wonderful, quiet confidence. As an example, he felt able to ask his peers – and superiors – for help and support. He got me to 'label' about 5000 images for his computer vision project. I willingly accepted his requests and would have supported him further while admiring his approach to work and his engagement with senior people like me.

He is an exceptional individual; I would welcome the opportunity to work with him again.

Yours faithfully

A J Rix
Rear Admiral Royal Navy
